KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

Thursday is International Women's Day and to celebrate, five "game-changing" women are coming together in Boston to talk about their success and to inspire others. The panel was organized by 261 Fearless, the nonprofit founded by Kathrine Switzer, who became an icon as the first woman to officially run the Boston Marathon. Ahead of the event, I talked with Switzer about why this kind of celebration is so important. Read more on page 5 and at metroboston.us.

MASS TOP COURT WEIGHS 20-DAY VOTER CUTOFF

Massachusetts' top court on Tuesday weighed whether it should declare a requirement that people must register to vote 20 days before an election unconstitutional, in a case that could impact the ability of thousands of citizens to vote. The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court heard arguments in an appeal by the state's top election official of a ruling by a lower-court judge in July holding that the registration cutoff violates the state's constitution. Secretary of the Commonwealth William Galvin, a Democrat who oversees the state's elections, appealed the ruling, arguing that the 20-day rule did not impose a severe burden on voting rights. He has proposed that the legislature pass a new law allowing Election Day registration. Assistant State Solicitor David Kravitz told the court that the issue of how to regulate registration should be left to the legislature.

WH ADVISER COHN QUITS AMID TARIFF DEBATE

Top White House economic adviser Gary Cohn, a Wall Street banker who opposes hefty steel and aluminum tariffs planned by President Donald Trump, said on Tuesday that he was resigning. "It has been an honor to serve my country and enact pro-growth economic policies to benefit the American people, in particular the passage of historic tax reform," Cohn said in a statement issued by the White House. His departure as director of the National Economic Council came after a little more than a year on the job. Trump's announcement last week of his plans to impose the tariffs sent U.S. stock prices tumbling and came after an intense debate within the White House between Cohn and other advocates of free trade, on one side, and protectionist advisers such as Peter Navarro on the other, White House sources said.

TRUMP: NORTH KOREA 'SINCERE' ON NUKE TALKS

4 Feeling the pressure of sanctions, North Korea seems "sincere" in its apparent willingness to halt nuclear tests if it held denuclearization talks with the United States, President Donald Trump said on Tuesday as U.S., South Korean and Japanese officials voiced skepticism about any discussions. Trump declined to say whether he had any preconditions for talks with Pyongyang as officials responded with caution and guarded optimism to the possibility following months of insults and threats of war between Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un. "I think they're sincere also because of the sanctions and what we're doing with respect to North Korea, including the great help that we've been given from China," Trump said at a news conference on Tuesday after meeting with Prime Minister Stefan Lofven of Sweden.

US TO COUNTERACT ANY 2018 ELECTION MEDDLING

5 President Donald Trump said on Tuesday there was interference by Russia and probably by other countries in the 2016 election, and the U.S. would counteract any attempt at meddling in the November 2018 elections. "Well, the Russians had no impact on our votes whatsoever, but certainly there was meddling and probably there was meddling from other countries and maybe other individuals," Trump said at a news conference on Tuesday. "We're doing a very, very deep study, and we're coming with some ... very strong suggestions on the '18 election. ... We'll counteract whatever they do." Director of National Intelligence Dan Coats insisted on Tuesday that the administration is "actively engaged" in countering Russian efforts to influence the November elections, even as he warned of Moscow's continuing "malign activities."

Mass. officials urge travel caution ahead of next storm

Ahead of the nor'easter that could drop 2 feet of snow on some parts of Massachusetts, officials are reminding commuters to be cautious.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Officials are warning Massachusetts residents to avoid driving and be cautious with all travel ahead of Wednesday's expected storm.

The nor'easter expected to hit Wednesday threatens the area, still recovering from the last storm, with heavy snow, strong winds and coastal flooding. Boston could get up to 8 inches of snow, according to the National Weather Service, and totals up to two feet of snow are possible near Worcester.

"This storm will bring heavy snowfall to areas across the state throughout Wednesday and into Thursday, which could create hazardous travel conditions, especially for the Wednesday evening commute when the snowfall may be at its heaviest," said Highway Administrator Jonathan Gulliver in a statement.

"We advise members of the public to stay off the roads if possible, consider working from home or postponing travel plans, and taking public transit if they must travel during this storm," he added. "Those who are out on the roadways should give themselves extra time to reach their destinations, travel at reduced speeds, and leave plenty of space between themselves and other vehicles."

MassDOT is prepping to handle the storm, coordinating the deployment of its up to 700 personnel who remove snow and ice off of roads throughout the state. This winter, the transportation department has more than 4,200 pieces of state and vendor snow-removal equipment.

Those using public transportation need to be careful as well, Keolis and MBTA officials urge.

"Passengers should exercise caution while traveling Wednesday and Thursday," said David Scorey, Keolis CEO and general manager, in a statement. "Our crews will continue working around the clock finishing clean up efforts while also performing the necessary prep to ensure platforms are clear and our resources are ready for additional snow, rain and freezing conditions."

"Passengers should exercise caution while traveling Wednesday and Thursday."
Keolis CEO and general manager David Scorey

Keolis has deployed workers this week to look for trees along the commuter rail tracks which may have been weakened by the weekend's storm and are at risk of falling if topped with heavy snow.

MBTA workers are also prepping for the storm, refilling sand and salt solutions and re-inspecting infrastructure like switches, signals and the snow plow train.

Commuters can check for updates during the storm via Twitter by following @MBTA_CR or mbta.com, and drivers can call 511, visit mass511.com or follow @MassDOT before heading out to get information on road conditions.

Boston Marathon icon still sprinting toward progress for women

Kathrine Switzer will be on a panel with four other iconic women on Thursday for an International Women's Day event hosted by her nonprofit 261 Fearless.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Kathrine Switzer knows the moment that changed her life: when she was attacked on the Boston Marathon course by a race official who tried to rip her number off her shirt.

She had been the first woman to officially run the Boston Marathon, and since then, Switzer has helped women change their lives through her nonprofit 261 Fearless.

Now, on Thursday, she'll speak with four other "game-changing" women about the moments that kickstarted their own iconic trajectories as part of a panel to celebrate International Women's Day.

"It's such a big year for women, and we're going forward on March 8 with something so positive, so forward-looking."

Kathrine Switzer

"It's such a big year for women, and we're going forward on March 8 with something so positive, so forward-looking," she said. "We wanted to do something with powerful women doing great things."

Switzer will be joined by Ayanna Pressley, the first woman of color elected to the Boston City Council now running for Congress; Joann Flaminio, the first female president of the Boston Athletic Association; Elizabeth Perry Tirrell, the first vice president of athletics at the American Heart Association; and Zahra Arabzada, an Afghan student behind "The Hijabi Runner" blog. Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey will speak at the beginning of the event.

Kathrine Switzer (center) pictured running the 2017 Boston Marathon, the 50th anniversary of her iconic run, with her husband Roger Robinson and Joann Flamino. PROVIDED BY 261 FEARLESS

Through this panel, these women will share their success stories and advice for other women.

"One of the things I aim to ask them is to name the one key thing that you did that kind of gave you your fearlessness, that big moment," she said. "We must ask them this because 261 Fearless is about empowering women."

For Switzer, there's no hesitation on her moment.

"It wasn't running the Boston Marathon, it wasn't signing up — it was the moment the official attacked me," Switzer said. "I knew then that no matter what I had to finish the race. If I didn't, no one would believe women. They would think I was there as a joke, a clown."

Switzer was 20 then, and she said finishing the race gave her "a vision for change." Her nonprofit has helped women around the world start their own running clubs.

"We're not about running fast, we're not about being competitive — we're about fearless women helping fearful women take the first step and change their lives," she said.

Switzer has been a role model to many, and she said she looks up to all the women on the panel.

"The woman from Afghanistan, oh, my God, to be able to get out of her country and run and have that sense of empowerment," she said. "Maura Healey, Ayanna Pressley, women who put it out there, walking into the political arena where women need to walk and it's so sticky and murky and rough … these women are leading the way."

Switzer considers Boston the birthplace of 261 Fearless, so it was natural to hold the International Women's Day panel there. Still, she wants the event to reach women all over the world.

"These women represent a broad spectrum of opportunity, inspiration … across racial, religious and age barriers," she said. "There should be a piece of information there to inspire [any woman] to go forward no matter what."

‘Are we next’ spray-painted outside Wellesley Middle School

Police are investigating the source of the spray-painted message found on the sidewalk in front of the school.

Wellesley police are investigating after a spray-painted message showed up on a Wellesley Middle School sidewalk Tuesday morning.

The bright orange spray paint that greeted students, staff and parents Tuesday morning read, “ARE WE NEXT,” taken by many to be a reference to the recent school shooting in Parkland, Florida, in which 17 people were killed.

“This is what my girls saw when they walked into middle school this morning,” Kelly Tuthill wrote on Twitter, where she shared an image of the graffiti. “Kids everywhere deserve to feel safe at school.”

Wellesley Middle School officials are working with local police to look into the incident.

“On March 6, 2018, at 7:38 a.m. officers were dispatched to the Wellesley Middle School to investigate a report of vandalism on the sidewalk,” the Wellesley Police Department said in an email. “The Wellesley Police Department and Wellesley Public Schools are working together to investigate the origin of the graffiti.”

Wellesley Middle School Principal Mark Ito addressed the graffiti in an email to staff and the school’s community.

“We are working with our facilities department to remove it and engaging our WPD, as we would for any suspicious act,” he wrote, according to the Boston Globe. “We are communicating with staff and students, and ensuring them of their safety.”

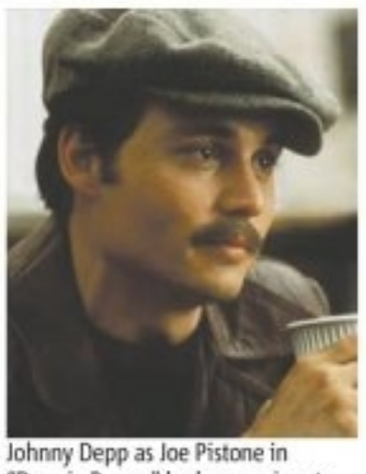
New study: Europeans are really into New York and Boston accents

European travelers think people from New York and Boston have sexy accents, according to a recent poll and quiz.

Linguistics experts from the language-learning app Babbel put together seven distinctive American accents: Bostonian, Southern, Midwestern, Minnesotan, New Yorker, Southern Californian and Texan. They partnered with Generator Hostels and asked more than 400 European hostel workers and asked them to pick which area has sexy accents.

According to the results from their poll, Europeans think people from areas in the Deep South, New York and Boston all have sexy accents.

According to the results of the poll, 20 percent of European foreigners have a thing for people with heavy Southern accents. Second on the list was the New York accent, followed by the Boston accent.



Johnny Depp as Joe Pistone in “Donnie Brasco” had a prominent New York accent. GETTY IMAGES

Most attractive and sexy accents, according to Europeans

1. Deep South (20 percent)
2. New Yorker (18 percent)
3. Bostonian (17 percent)
4. Southern Californian (16 percent)
5. Texan (14 percent)
6. Midwestern (10 percent)
7. Minnesotan (5 percent)

Their findings showed that Brits and Swedes are really into the Southern Californian accent.

The survey results showed that French people (57 percent) and Italians (19 percent) think New Yorkers have sexy accents, while Germans (30 percent), Spaniards (27 percent) and Dutch people (26 percent) are really into the Boston accent.

As for the Deep South accent, the only reason it was ranked No. 1 in the survey is that Ireland had a strong influence on the vote. They found that 31 percent of Irish people who took the survey thought people from the Deep South have sexy accents.

Babbel looked at the data and determined that the rankings can change depending on the country of the person taking the survey.

According to Babbel, of the hostel workers surveyed, British, French, Spanish, Italian and Dutch people voted the Minnesotan accent as the least attractive. LENYON WHITAKER

Worst. Family. Vacation. EVER!

Guess who's coming to dinner? AVIRON PICTURES ROGUE

No one's getting sleep tonight. AVIRON PICTURES ROGUE

"The Strangers: Prey at Night" is a terrifying tale based on actual events.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

A family takes a road trip, off the beaten path and in the off season. Sounds innocuous enough. That is until a ragtag pack of murderous strangers in masks begins to wreak havoc. It's a scary movie, but one of the scariest parts is that we're told from the start that it's "based on true events." Makes those boring breaks with mom and dad sound like heaven.

Metro wanted to get to the bottom of what actually transpired, so we spoke with director Johannes Roberts to learn more about his idiosyncratic horror film.

Really? Like, this actually happened? That's chilling.

Brian Bertino, who wrote the screenplay, actually had the same exact things happen to him in terms of [a mysterious] girl coming up to [his] house and knocking at the door. Then there were all these burglaries around his house. Then he mixed that in with Charles Manson stuff. That's really where all of the inspiration came from for him. Brian wrote the first "The Strangers" movie, too, and they're both the same sort of event.

This feels like a very different kind of horror movie.

We approached it in a slightly different way to how I've done things before. I really tried to avoid making this a "jump, scare" movie. We really let you see the horror first, and the characters don't. Rather than [have] things leap out at you, a lot of the techniques were us showing the headlights and the Strangers and then allowing the dread to build. That was quite fun. This is horror in a slightly more-old school way.

What attracted you to the movie?

I loved the first one, and I really wanted to make a movie styled like John Carpenter [legendary director of hits like "The Thing," "Halloween" and "Escape from L.A."]. What I really responded to was that this was my opportunity to go really retro. I wanted to make "Christine." I wanted to make "The Fog." So I brought those movies into the mix. We had a lot of fun using old techniques and tunes.

The randomness of the attack portrayed, and the fact that this actually did happen, seems kind of ... timely?

Yeah, the world is currently a very terrifying place. Especially in America. But the movies I love are the John Carpenter horror films of the '80s. And the power of them was always the fact that they never explained why the murders were happening, which put the emphasis of the movie on how the characters are surviving this rather than back-plot. When there's no reasoning it's much more frightening.

"The Strangers: Prey At Night" will be released this Friday.

'Proper' Southern food comes to Boston's South End

We may be damn Yankees, but Boston is quickly becoming a hotbed for great Southern food.

The latest addition to the city's surging culinary scene is Southern Proper, a South End restaurant owned by executive chef Jason Cheek. After honing his skills in the kitchen at local hotspots like Toro and Merrill & Co., Cheek decided to go back to his North Carolina roots with his exciting new venture.

"I spent much of my childhood on my grandparents' farm in North Carolina, where we picked dinner from the fields and slow cooked whole hogs over coals," Cheek said in a release.

Southern Proper brings a taste of North Carolina to Boston.

"My memories from an early age revolve around homemade Southern food and the experience of eating together — with family and at large community gatherings."

The menu at Southern Proper reflects Cheek's love for traditional, North Carolina fare, featuring regional favorites like shrimp and grits, hushpuppies and an array of smoked and salted meats. All of the tasty condiments and sauces are made in-house as well, including the sweet and spicy pineapple hot sauce and a lavender-infused honey.

Cheek and his team truly hit it out of the park with their delicious take on comfort food staples like the charred okra and pimento mac and cheese. Southern Proper also offers an amazing fried chicken, which features a perfect combination of crispy skin with a flavorful bite of meat.

The drink program by Katie Gilroy features plenty of Southern flair

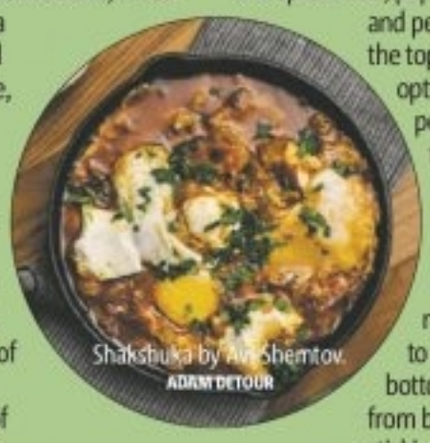
Chef Avi Shemtov's 'nduja-sausage shakshuka

Chubby Chickpea's chef Avi Shemtov breaks down how to make his savory shakshuka.

-½ cup of extra-virgin olive oil
-8 cloves of fresh garlic
-2 medium yellow onions, sliced
-6 oz. of 'Nduja Artisans-brand 'nduja sausage, diced
-6 cups of vine-ripe tomatoes, cut into ⅛ths
-1 tablespoon of kosher salt
-1 tablespoon of paprika
-2 teaspoons of ground cumin
-1 teaspoon of fresh-cracked black pepper
-1 chili pepper, diced (optional)
-6 large eggs
-4 oz. of goat cheese, crumbled
-1 head of flat parsley, chopped



Shakshuka by Avi Shemtov.
ADAM DETOUR

Blend together olive oil and raw garlic in a food processor, then heat the olive oil-garlic mixture in a large, deep frying pan over medium heat. After about 2 minutes, add onions and stir slowly until they become translucent, about 3 to 4 minutes. Add the 'nduja and stir slowly with wooden spoon about every 30 seconds, for about 2 minutes, allowing the meat to melt into the onions. Add the tomatoes and spread salt, paprika, cumin and pepper over the top. Add optional chili pepper at this time. Cover and simmer 15 minutes, stirring only slightly if necessary to prevent bottom of stew from burning and sticking to pan.

After 15 minutes, stir once or twice to make sure tomatoes break down completely. Turn heat to medium and simmer for 10 more minutes. Next, distribute the goat cheese evenly across the surface and crack the eggs, evenly spacing them across the surface of the stew. Cover pan and simmer 2 to 3 minutes to poach the eggs until set. Eggs should set to a perfect sunny-side up or lightly over easy. Serves 4 to 6.

6 Cooking techniques every home chef should master

Founder of Home Cooking New York Jennifer Clair talks us through her debut cookbook "Six Basic Cooking Techniques," based on her culinary school's best-selling class.

KATE MOONEY
kate.mooney@metro.us

Among the essential cooking techniques: how to make a flavorful pan sauce. PROVIDED

If you want to get better at cooking at home but aren't sure where to begin, a new cookbook can provide you with a good starting point. "Six Basic Cooking Techniques: Culinary Essentials for the Home Cook" breaks down the most need-to-know skills to give you the confidence to prepare anything you need in the kitchen.

The "culinary manual" is written by Jennifer Clair, the founder of Home Cooking New York, a culinary school based in SoHo. The Institute of Culinary Education (ICE) grad worked in food media for over a decade (as a food editor at Saveur magazine and a cookbook editor at Martha Stewart) before founding HCNY in 2002.

"Six Basic Cooking Techniques," which marks her return to the written word, is an extension of Home Cooking New York's most popular class of the same name. In companionship with or in lieu of the class, it can be used as an instructional manual and an actual cookbook, as each technique is also paired with recipes.

Clair talks us through the six basic techniques and why they're so essential for any beginning home chef.

Knife skills

Whether you're chopping vegetables or carving meat, any home cook is lost without the proper technique for wielding a knife, possibly the most useful tool in the kitchen. In this section, Clair instructs readers on knife essentials, including "how to hold it, how to mince, how to dice, how to julienne, how to work with garlic, how to sharpen it."

Cooking meats

"How do you make a piece of meat that's nice and brown and crusty and delicious, but not overcooked?" According to Clair, the approach is the same, no matter if you're preparing chicken, pork or steak. "A, brown it so you caramelize it on the outside and then B, cook it properly to temperature," she explains. She's a firm believer in using a thermometer instead of cutting into meat to tell if it's done. "It's imprecise, you lose so much juice and you really can't tell by the color," she says.

Making flavorful pan sauces

Now that you've learned how to properly prepare your meat, this section shows you how to make a sauce from the drippings left behind in the pan. You'll learn how to create a reduction by adding liquid (broth, water, or wine) until it thickens, or make a gravy by creating a roux (a mixture of fat and flour).

All about veggies

The final three chapters of the book instruct on how to properly cook every vegetable in the supermarket. Clair takes readers through "blanching," a quick-cooking method whereby you add vegetables to boiling salted water for just a few minutes, "roasting," by applying hot and dry oven heat, and everything you need to know about how to sauté and season leafy greens.

"Six Basic Cooking Techniques: Culinary Essentials for the Home Cook" is available on Amazon and in stores nationwide.

What are the perks of Airbnb Plus?

Get access to high-end home rentals on the site's new premium brand.

SAM BRODSKY
Samantha.Brodsky@metro.us

Rentals on Airbnb Plus provide guests with high-end amenities and furnishings and access to a fast-acting support team. ALL PHOTOS INSTAGRAM/@ AIRBNB

It's been a decade since Airbnb debuted in 2008. And now, it's created Airbnb Plus, a service for all-star rentals that meet a 100-point quality checklist. Here's what you need to know.

What is Airbnb Plus?
"Airbnb Plus is a new selection of only the highest-quality homes with hosts who are known for great reviews and attention to detail," the company wrote in a Facebook post.

This means that whether it's a chic flat in London or a modern Milan home, the kitchen is stocked with cooking essentials, the décor is on point and all appliances are up to par and working. Plus, customers will also have access to a fast-acting, reliable support team if needed.

Airbnb's chief executive, Brian Chesky, told The New York Times that since starting in 2008, "we have evolved, but we think we can go much further and offer something for everyone. Some travelers want predictability and certain comforts, and Airbnb Plus will give them these."

To set the standards for this list of premium homes, Chesky said that Airbnb owners with the highest ratings were asked "what they did to earn those ratings, and [we] discovered that they all had well-stocked homes and delivered a consistent experience to their guests."

How do I rent my home on Airbnb Plus?
Hosts must apply to have their homes accepted, and Airbnb will send a photographer to inspect.

As a host, you must be rated 4.8 or higher, and your home will be checked for "100-plus things that guests told us they love," which includes unique style and "must-have amenities" like coffee (good call there). A home can even lose its Airbnb Plus status if it doesn't maintain its quality control and ratings.

"Those who want to get an Airbnb Plus status must maintain the interior and exterior of their properties all the time," a Vayoo blog post on the service reads. "Every appliance in your home must be working properly, your home must have a high level of security (window and door locks), and you must keep every space from your yard to your bedroom clean and well-organized."

Where are these Airbnb Plus homes?
The service is debuting with more than 2,000 homes, according to The Times, and for now, it's limited to 13 cities such as Toronto, Milan, Shanghai and Los Angeles. These numbers will reportedly raise to 75,000-plus in more than 50 cities by the end of this year. To tell if a home is Airbnb Plus, look for the "PLUS" tag under the listing.

Do Airbnb Plus homes cost more?
Yes. The average nightly rate of a standard Airbnb is $100; and $200 for a rental.

BREATH OF FRESH AIR

A quiet spring training is typically a good sign for a baseball team. Now that the Red Sox have J.D. Martinez signed, sealed and delivered — Sox camp has been drama-free. Even lightning-rod David Price is saying all the right things these days. WEEI.com's Rob Bradford told Price this week that many believe he is "the most important player" on this year's Red Sox team.

Price responded with an enthusiastic, "I like it!"

"I feel good right now," Price told WEEI. "I think I'm ready to have my best year. I just haven't had two good years here. … [This year] I look to go out there and dominate like I know I'm capable of doing, and that's what I expect to do."

Yeah, yeah. We all know spring training quotes are the equivalent of Donald Trump talking about all the great things his administration continues to do.

"We've done so well, we're so great, and we're going to continue to do great!"

But Price actually saying the right things for once is a step in the right direction. On the surface, it at least seems like he's happy with the clubhouse under new manager Alex Cora.

CRUNCH TIME

MATT BURKE

WHERE WILL BUTLER LAND?

If this were the heyday of the Patriots–Jets rivalry (think Parcells and Mangini eras), there is no doubt that Malcolm Butler would be the type of player that would jump to a rival. Given Butler's beef with the Patriots, he would love to stick it to Bill Belichick two times a year for the next five years if given the opportunity. But this is a new era. If you can get the money and get revenge at the same time, great. But first, get that damn money.

A couple weeks back, New York Newsday writer Calvin Watkins, tweeted, "Hearting the Jets will look into signing cornerback Malcolm Butler."

ESPN polled its NFL writers this week, however, and asked, "Where will Malcolm Butler play in 2018?" None of them said the Jets. San Francisco actually garnered the most amount of votes as the Niners have money to spend (even after dishing out the Jimmy Garoppolo deal) and are in need of a cornerback. Tampa Bay, Indy and Seattle were also mentioned as potential landing spots for the former Super Bowl hero.

The NFL free agent frenzy begins on March 14.

MARCH SADNESS

Believe it or not, college basketball used to have legit buzz in this city. During the mid-1990s, UMass and Boston College often made the NCAA tournament, and sometimes even went deep into March (UMass, of course, made it all the way to the Final Four in 1996).

Part of the reason why college hoops is about as popular as high school curling right now in Boston is because of how good the pro sports teams in this town have been for the past 15 years. In the '90s, the Celtics sucked, the Bruins were blah, the Patriots were good but not great, and the Red Sox were hit or miss. There was much less competition back then when it came to attention.

In case you were wondering, UMass and Boston College aren't making the tournament again this year. UMass is a yucky 12-19 this season, and BC is likely to be bounced in the ACC tournament today.

The East Regional of March Madness will be held at the Garden two weeks from now, so that should be fun. Just don't expect any locals to be playing. The days of Boston as college basketball hub are long gone, and aren't coming back.

Aries Physical activity will help ease stress and give you time to rethink your position on bothersome matters regarding your personal finances or job. Don't speak out in haste.

Taurus Share your feelings with someone you care about. Making plans that will lead to a better understanding of your intentions will benefit you and put your mind at ease.

Gemini Stick to the script and be honest about your concerns. Transparency will make a difference to a situation that concerns you. Play fair, remain calm and avoid chaos.

Cancer Put more creative energy into whatever job you are given. The success you have will lead to new opportunities. Express your ideas to get positive feedback.

Leo Keep an open mind, but don't let someone entice you into indulging in something that's not good for you. Use your intelligence and focus on fitness, diet and good health.

Virgo Make changes to the way you live or alter your surroundings to encourage working on improving your skills and knowledge. The outcome will boost your earning capability.

Libra Learn from experience and avoid making the same mistake twice. Avert domestic problems by keeping your suggestions positive. An upbeat attitude will pay off.

Scorpio Put your best foot forward when it comes to self-improvement. Don't let criticism hold you back or stop you from fulfilling your dreams. Be true to yourself and your beliefs.

Sagittarius Put your energy into following a creative pursuit or something that will help you improve your living arrangements. Question anyone you feel is withholding information.

Capricorn A chance to do something different or to expand your skills at work looks promising. You'll get the response you've been waiting for from someone you admire.

Aquarius Someone being emotionally manipulative will throw you off guard. Back away from anyone displaying coercive or erratic behavior in an attempt to take advantage of you.

Pisces Know what you want and be willing to fight for it. Don't give in to criticism or anger. Make decisions based on your needs. Put the past behind you. EUGENIA LAST
